What is Survivor Link + Public Health AmeriCorps?

Survivor Link began in the Office of Gender-Based Violence at Arizona State University to provide social workers the skills to implement evidence-based domestic violence intervention and support healthy relationships. Through funding from AmeriCorps and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, Survivor Link is expanding to 14 universities across 11 states.

Why participate in Survivor Link + Public Health AmeriCorps?

Survivor Link + Public Health AmeriCorps members will engage in 675 service hours (between August 1 and July 31) to earn a $4,000 stipend and a $2,474.27 Segal Education Award. Service hours include internship, training in domestic violence by national experts, and engagement with a faculty mentor at your university. This is an excellent opportunity to participate in National service, earn money to engage in internship hours, and connect with people across the U.S. who share an interest in building healthy and violence-free communities.

How will I improve domestic violence services in my community?

Working closely with colleagues and mentors, Survivor Link members will provide information and training to public health agencies about evidence-based domestic violence interventions, healthy relationships, and domestic violence resources in the community. Students will receive training throughout academic year and will work closely with a faculty mentor and national experts to ensure that they are prepared to provide this information to their placement sites. Some training will be asynchronous so students can do it on their own time and some will be synchronous so that students build community and learn from one another.
